Never content with the status quo, Graham brings a sharp strategic and long-range planning mind to his role as General Manager.

His strong background in training and human resource development, together with marketing, brand development and general management has been enhanced with experience in multiple international business settings.

Graham's warm personality, easy style and high achiever mindset extend beyond his professional life and are strongly evident with his devotion to family, community work and a real passion for the great outdoors.

With an MBA through QUT and time spent operating his own consultancy practice associated with business growth, new venture leadership and transition, Graham understands the powerful business benefits derived from effective people performance and he applies this week in, week out, in a practical way both within the business and in his engagement with Livingstones clients.

Graham thrives on setting a strategic agenda, focusing on the agreed objectives and resolutely implementing the tactics for success. His quietly spoken manner belies a strong and tenacious determination to achieve great business outcomes. Thoroughly goal orientated and a proven problem solver, Graham strives to ensure every project is successful beyond expectation.

During his career, Graham has fostered effective business relationships with clients and suppliers in Europe, North America and Asia. He also undertook a program for Leaders of Professional Service Firms at Harvard Business School. It is this breadth of international commercial experience that gives Graham valuable global insights to issues and challenges.

While much of Graham's energy and attention is devoted to ensuring Livingstones lives up to its reputation for outstanding levels of service, he is also available in a consultancy capacity to assist clients with organisational strategy, business planning, policy development and implementation and major transformational change.
